The Beauty of Words

With Susanna Tamaro and Stefano Zecchi

Moderated by Luigi Mascheroni (journalist)

Can life be lived in the pursuit of beauty, through its narration and dissemination? And what is the profound essence of this idea, so universally resonant yet deeply personal? Italy's programme in Frankfurt begins with a dialogue between those who have examined beauty through the lens of philosophy and those who have articulated it through literature.

Living in the Time of the Apocalypse

With Luigi Maria Epicoco and Carlo Rovelli

Moderated by Nico Spuntoni (journalist)

Viruses and wars, economic recession and the climate crisis. With a degree of severity, reality is reviving a concept long familiar to the major religions: the end of the world. Is this an exaggeration, or should we genuinely be concerned for the future? The response from a renowned physicist and a distinguished theologian/writer will offer insight through dialogue between science and faith, exploring both present and future perspectives.

Moderated by Maria Carolina Foi (Università degli Studi di Trieste)

ROOTS IN THE FUTURE

ITALY

GUEST OF HONOUR 2024
FRANKFURTER BUCHMESSE
16-20 OCTOBER 2024

Numerous Italian writers have not only contemplated such a move but have also embraced it and portrayed it in their works. One such author is Andrea Bajani, a finalist for the Strega and Campiello prizes in 2021 with his novel Il libro delle case. For him, the German capital - where he resided until a decade ago - served as a pivotal chapter in his journey as an expatriate author, eventually guiding him to America. Another is Mario Desiati, who not only lived in Berlin but also set part of his novel Spatriati, which won the Strega Prize in 2022, in the city. From the first steps taken in the city, through varying lengths of stay, to the final farewell, intimate secrets and literary curiosities of the "metropolis" with a unique allure, as experienced by those who have, at least once in their lives, encountered it.

In Search of Lost Pleasure

With Giuseppe Culicchia and Giordano Bruno Guerri

Moderated by Luciano Lanna (Centro per il libro e la lettura)

What happened to pleasure? One hundred and thirty-five years ago, in 1889, Gabriele D'Annunzio's The Child of Pleasure was published. Written when he was just 25, this youthful, sensual and provocative novel introduced a "feral note," as Benedetto Croce described it, into Italian literature, which was then largely dominated by Verga's verismo. What remains today of that 'pleasure'? And who shall continue to nurture it through a narrative of the twenty-first century that seems increasingly attuned to the theme of 'discomfort'? The response is offered by Giordano Bruno Guerri, a leading expert on D'Annunzio, historian and president of the Vittoriale, and by Giuseppe Culicchia, curator of the new Radici festival and author of a striking début from 30 years ago, where the notion of pleasure seems to wane into a fleeting mirage: Tutti giù per terra.

Between Naples and Europe: Celebrating the 800th Anniversary of Università di Napoli Federico II

With Matteo Lorito and Enrico Schleiff

Moderated by Christiane Liermann Traniello (Villa Vigoni)

On 5 June 1224, Holy Roman Emperor and King of Sicily Frederick II sent a letter from Syracuse designating Naples as the seat of the kingdom's 'studium generale.' This was 800 years ago, and the result was the establishment of the world's first secular and state university which remains one of the largest in Europe today. In Frankfurt, not far from historic Swabia, the ancestral realm of Frederick II's dynasty, a celebration will be held to mark the notable anniversary of the Neapolitan university. This international event will feature a dialogue between Matteo Lorito, Rector of Federico II, and Enrico Schleiff, President of Goethe University Frankfurt.

FRANKFURTER BUCHMESSE
16-20 OCTOBER 2024

With Teresa Radice and Stefano Turconi

Moderated by Paola Colombo (Cosmo/Westdeutscher Runfunk)

Stories are important. Teresa Radice, a scriptwriter, and Stefano Turconi, an illustrator, partners in both creativity and life, remind us of this in their latest graphic novel, Il Contastorie, published at the close of 2023. Set in the Amazon, this represents a new and thrilling phase in the journey that started over a decade ago with Globetrotting Viola and has since ventured through forbidden ports and mysterious forests, amid fleeing soldiers and the 'enigmatic Orlandi'. Eternally sustained by the restorative powers of the imagination.

My Home is Where I Write

With Olga Campofreda and Igiaba Scego

Moderated by Shelly Kupferberg (DeutschlandfunkKultur, RBBKultur)

Olga Campofreda, originally from Caserta, has traversed diverse landscapes both in her writing (as evidenced in her 2019 narrative reportage A San Francisco con Lawrence Ferlinghetti) and in her personal life, as she now lives in London and works as a researcher in Italian and Cultural Studies. Her experiences are also woven into her novel Ragazze perbene. Born in Rome, Igiaba Scego has utilised her books and articles as a platform to explore themes related to Somali heritage, the experiences of migrant children and post-colonialism. Her work ranges from the 2010 autobiography La mia casa è dove sono to her latest publication, Cassandra a Mogadiscio (2023). Two distinct yet contemporary narratives where the kaleidoscope of horizons and identities is seamlessly connected by the enduring thread of writing.

On the Edge of the Abyss. Artists, Writers and intellectuals on the Eve of the Second World War

With Marina Valensise and Uwe Wittstock

Moderated by Christiane Liermann Traniello (Villa Vigoni)

In 1938, Europe started to understand that the peace it had come to know was now nothing more than an illusion, as the continent was swiftly descending toward the brink of war. Some of the first to recognise this, though not all, were intellectuals, artists and writers. Marina Valensise has dedicated Sul baratro to them. Città, artisti e scrittori d'Europa alla vigilia della Seconda Guerra Mondiale is a passionate exploration of the anxieties, torments and even indifference that permeated the artistic and cultural circles of Europe's capitals on the eve of the Second World War. The book spans from Vienna to Budapest, Berlin to Paris, Prague to Moscow, and Rome to Brussels. As unsettling questions about the future and peace arise, the Roman author and German essayist Uwe Wittstock, renowned for his work February 1933. The Winter of Literature, which chronicles the devastating effects of Hitler's rise to power on Germany's literary and artistic spheres, delves into the position, role and fate of intellectuals amidst historical upheavals.

Some authors, in addition to their esteemed writing careers, immerse themselves deeply in the world of publishing through a variety of roles. As series curators, editors and contributors to literary magazines and radio programmes, they are thoroughly engaged with books, grasping their intricacies from every angle. Their holistic approach to literature resonates with the tradition of many distinguished figures in Italian literary history. Antonio Franchini (Il fuoco che ti porti dentro), and Chiara Valerio (Chi dice e chi tace) belong to this category. Fresh from their personal successes as authors, they are also key figures in an open dialogue about the facets and implications of contemporary Italian publishing.

The Culture That Unites. From Manuzio to the ebook

With Massimo Bray, Alessandro De Pedys and Umberto Vattani

Moderated by Luciano Lanna (Centro per il libro e la lettura)

The strength of the book lies in its universal appeal and immediate nature: a medium that is easy to understand, produce and use, accessible in any place and by all people. Yet this simplicity is a testament to human genius - an achievement of those who, over the centuries, have perfected the art of merging beauty with functionality. From Aldo Manuzio's Venetian typography in the 15th century to the innovations of the digital revolution, this captivating journey is guided by art diplomat Ambassador Umberto Vattani, cultural historian and politician, former minister and Treccani general director, Massimo Bray and the Director General for Public and Cultural Diplomacy (Alessandro De Pedys).

Living on the Edge of the Line

With Mauro Covacich and Paolo Rumiz

Moderated by Tilman Spreckelsen (Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung)

In Trieste, everything seems to challenge your boundaries. From the rush of the bora wind sweeping down from the mountains and propelling you toward the sea, to the local surnames with their distinctive final consonants that lend a unique twist to traditional Italian names. To its position, precariously balanced on a line that both man and history have repeatedly shifted. What exactly is the nature of such boundaries? We consulted Mauro Covacich and Paolo Rumiz, two authors who, beyond their Triestine roots, are known for their tendency to traverse boundaries - be they fictional, linguistic, real or imaginary - in their pursuit of understanding others and valuing diversity as a form of enrichment.

Similar to the story in Viola Ardone's Il treno dei bambini, which follows a train of hope in 1946 as it travels across Italy from South to North, an international bestseller; or the tale set against the backdrop of World War II's Piedmont province, which inspired the recent publishing sensation Ferrovie del Messico by Gian Marco Griffi; or the narrative emerging from a 1990s crime on the Abruzzo Apennines, as depicted in Donatella Di Pietrantonio's latest novel, L'età fragile. Poetry, like thoughts and other things of nature, happens in the shortest time, without any special knowledge, questions the existing totally, is self-fulfilling and remains secret even when one understands it. Precisely by virtue of its language, it is not called upon to give explanations of itself, but rather is an invitation for anyone to cross that open field of every lived and living experience where 'there is no inch / that cannot collapse / from one moment / to the next'. Laura Accerboni and Marko Miladinović are not even sure whether the floor is left or not, but they know no other way than this special attitude, this sublime claim of the word, to live freely.

Recounting Marco Polo's extraordinary journey

With Giovanni Montanaro (writer and lawyer)

On the occasion of the 700th anniversary of Marco Polo's death, on the suggestion of one of the most famous and fabled journeys in the history of literature, Italian writer Giovanni Montanaro recounts Il Milione. The Travels of Marco Polo, and thus the history of Venice, the trade routes, the life of the great explorer, the missed marriages, poverty and wealth, the encounter with Kublai Khan, and with another world. A rendezvous to discover real and imaginary journeys on the suggestion of one of the most famous and fabled journeys in the history of literature. Marco Polo lived an extraordinary story, through his journey he forged links between distant peoples, opening up new horizons of knowledge and exchange. His figure embodies the courage of discovery and openness to the unknown, leaving an indelible mark on the history of exploration and cultural connections.

"It is a book that tells of pain and heals it, because it is written by a woman who knows the miracle of words and the blood of wounds". This is how writer and psychoanalyst Vittorio Lingiardi described the novel that won the seventy-eighth edition of the Strega Prize last January: L'età fragile by Donatella Di Pietrantonio. Together with Stefano Petrocchi, director of the Bellonci Foundation, the author will explore the 'fragile ages' of human existence, the right words to describe them and the role of the Strega Prize, which has been a cornerstone of contemporary Italian literature since 1947. This prestigious award acts as both a compass, guiding new literary directions, and a pantheon honouring distinguished authors (from Flaiano and Pavese to Moravia and Bassani, Morante and Buzzati, Ginzburg and Ortese, Levi and Eco, up to the voices of our time). It also serves as a significant commercial force, influencing national book sales and boosting translations abroad.

With Marco Balzano and Paolo Nori

Moderated by Maïke Albath (Deutschlandfunk Kultur, Süddeutsche Zeitung, Die Zeit)

Exploring the subtleties that can slip through the cracks when moving between two languages, Sofia Coppola crafted one of her most celebrated films nearly twenty years ago: Lost in Translation. But what if the opposite were also true? What if something is gained in the act of translation? Paolo Nori, author translator and passionate admirer of Russian literature, and Marco Balzano, whose novel I'm Staying Here has been so successfully translated into German that it even inspired a new theatrical adaptation, delve into the search for that elusive 'something more'.

It is never too late to pen words of love, nor too early to infuse them with humanity. In a century shaken by turbulence that appears to overshadow its romantic dimensions while magnifying irrational and inhumane violence, a poetic dialogue takes shape. This exchange features the esteemed Italian poetess Vivian Lamarque, who, as her latest book's title reveals, persistently seeks and celebrates L'amore da vecchia (love later in life), and the German philosopher, poet and musician Asmus Trautsch, renowned for his research on the Anthropocene Epoch and his exploration of the human condition in the context of contemporary planetary crises.

Return Journey: Root Tourism

With Riccardo Giumelli and Luigi Maria Vignali

Moderated by: to be confirmed

Over a span of a century and a half, from the mid-19th to the end of the 20th century, it is estimated that more than twenty million Italians emigrated in search of better opportunities. They travelled to nearby lands such as Switzerland, France and Germany, or ventured to distant destinations like the Americas and Australia. Many of these emigrants settled in their new countries, and today, their descendants are increasingly making the journey back, even if only temporarily, to explore their ancestral roots. This phenomenon, known as ‘root tourism,’ reflects the growing economic significance of reconnecting with one's place of origin. This will be the topic of discussion when Riccardo Giumelli, who explores this subject in Scoprirsi italiani, comes together with Luigi Maria Vignali, Director General for Italians Abroad at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

In the beginning was... what exactly? The origins of the universe (and Creation) remain shrouded in a veil of uncertainty that humanity has sought to lift for millennia through faith and science, religious texts, philosophical musings and scientific research. The Story of How Everything Began*.

In a career spanning fifty years, Lorenzo Mattotti has frequently pushed the boundaries of illustration, intertwining it with the classics of literature (both on paper and in film, as seen in the animated adaptation of Buzzati's The Bears' Famous Invasion of Sicily). He has adorned the covers of prestigious international magazines and has merged his art with the stories, rhythms and movements that were the focus of his recent retrospective exhibition in Brescia. Of a later generation, Alessandro Sanna has continued in a similar vein, reinterpreting the works of Rodari and Calvino, engaging with music (as seen in the book Crescendo, accompanied by compositions from jazz musician Paolo Fresu), and illustrating the covers of major magazines as well as the pages of books. His work reconnects with his roots, exemplified by the forthcoming Saltafossi, set for release this autumn. These two figures are leading voices in Italian illustration, each exploring the diverse potentials of language, expression and storytelling.

Every Story is a Place

With Paolo Cognetti and Nicola Lagioia

How decisive is the environment in shaping the development of a story? Can a murder take place only within the confines of the house where it is depicted? Is a character born before or after the landscape that envelops them? And how do the new digital realms, virtual yet omnipresent, which we navigate daily, influence literary creation? These questions prompt a comprehensive exploration - perhaps something even more - between two of the leading figures behind the 21st-century Italian novel. Both writers are so intimately connected to 'places' that they frequently incorporate them into their book titles: Paolo Cognetti (The Eight Mountains, Giù nella valle) and Nicola Lagioia (The Lying Game, The City of the Living).

Puglia and its museums. A sentimental journey

GUEST OF HONOUR 2024
FRANKFURTER BUCHMESSE

The reality of museums in Apulia is so varied that it is difficult to say how many can be defined as such today. The ninety percent of museums in Apulia is made up of small archaeological collections, reconstructions of the processes of anthropization that have affected this strip of land that stretches out into the Mediterranean, exposed to disembarks, conquests, migrations, landings, shipwrecks, of which museums preserve an intangible echo; principals of identity adrift in a world that runs in the opposite direction from the urge to recover a relationship with the soul of places. In view of the fragmented nature of Apulian museum reality, what connotes a museum as such, whether large or small, rich or poor, beautiful or ugly, antique or contemporary, is the sentimental relationship it manages to establish with the community and the measure to which it is perceived as an agent of change of reality and how attuned it is to the dreams and hopes of the society in which it operates. The poets of sentimental dynamics understand this, and Franco Arminio is a poet intimately connected with the spirit of places and with the feeling of Southern countries and with what connects the South to the East. This is the reason why we asked him to undertake a very personal journey though Apulia and its museums, a sentimental itinerary capable of returning us to the sense of whole and at the same time leading us to the essence of things. A journey not as an expert but as a poet, precisely, with the capacity that poetic language has to become an instrument of investigation, as Ezra Pound reminds us. Writing about poetry is a way of thinking about one's time, Antonio Prete taught us, and paraphrasing the poet from Salento, we can say that, like poetry, museums are a point of distance from which to look at our time.

Every Shade of Crime Fiction

Moderated by Alf Mayer (Cultur Mag)

In Italy, crime and detective fiction are often associated with a single shade of yellow, as a result of a historical publishing tradition. Yet this colour is far from singular. Indeed, its shades have expanded over the years, as have the influences and literary models that have shaped it. This dynamic evolution will be illustrated through an engaging dialogue with two leading figures who have crafted some of the most cherished fiction over the past three decades.

At 16.00: Maurizio de Giovanni will present his Neapolitan-style noir, transporting the atmosphere of Naples to Frankfurt. He brings with him the world of Sara, former policewoman facing a new investigation recounted in Sorelle, and The Bastards of Pizzofalcone, the protagonists of his latest chapter, Pioggia per i Bastardi di Pizzofalcone.

At 16.30: Antonio Manzini, creator of the Rocco Schiavone character, will present his contemporary detective story, inviting us to reflect on the delicate balance between law and justice - a central theme in his latest book, Tutti i particolari in cronaca.

Actor Massimo Venturiello, who was a pupil of Camilleri's and who lent his voice to the audio books in the Commissario Montalbano series, will read a preview of a selection of the unpublished letters that from 1949 to 1960 the man who was to become one of the most popular, best-read, best-translated Italian writers wrote, holding uninterrupted conversations with his family and himself, and composing a sort of autobiography of his early years. The letters will later be published in a volume, and it is to Antonio Sellerio, Andrea Camilleri's publisher, that the prologue to this preview reading is entrusted.
